LECONY BEFORE THE GRAND JURY.

Challley Leconey, who was recently acquitted of murdering his niece, again appeared in the role of a witness yesterday. He went before the grand jury, having the object of securing an indictment against Detective Patrick M. Gallagher, of the Pro-courier's office, and Garrett Murray, who was one of the detectives who acted on the case, and putting them in the trial. He based his claim of murder on the ground that the detective and colored youth had sworn falsely when they testified that the colored youth had moved. The grand jury, after hearing the evidence, returned a bill. Leconey refused to be interviewed by a reporter, saying that he did not care to talk to newspaper men. The grand jury also returned an indictment for the killing of Henry Rawlins in self-defense, near Haddonfield, on February 6. Harden was discharged from custody.
